They've Got to Stop

Kicking our Border Around

Mr. Venustiano Carranza, head of the de facto government of Mexico, is about to find out that Uncle Sam means business.

This famous relative of ours can and does stand for a lot of things that no other government would tolerate, because he is bigger and broader minded than not so greedy as other governments, but when he finally decides that the end of the string has been reached he leaves no doubt as to his course.

Mr. Carranza has just simply got to stop kicking our border around. It's a nice border, and we like it, and what's more important, it's ours. We are about to show some people to the south of us that we're going to keep it just as it was—nice and quiet and orderly, as all good borders should be. It may take a little strenuous action to bring this tranquil condition about, but then we have just called out about 100,000 men, and they are fully prepared to carry out any work this Uncle Sam asks of them.

Also Uncle Sam and the boys in khaki will find that the newspapers throughout the country are with them heart and soul and will boost their game to its successful end. The sword and the editorial pen of this nation will work together so that justice and right shall prevail, and no mouthing and blubbery by a misguided, bewhiskered Mexican and his equally misguided backers will alter the fate that is in store for them.

Our government has given notice that its sorely tried patience is at an end. The mosquito is certainly an insignificant thing but its continued pestering is annoying, and in the end it has to be "swatted."—American Press

SUPREME AT CHESS BOARD

Paul Charles Morphy, American, Was One of the Greatest Players the World Has Ever Known.

Paul Charles Morphy, the famous American chess player, is classed as "perhaps the most remarkable chess player of modern times." He was born in New Orleans in 1837, and was notably precocious as a child; he showed his precocity particularly in games of chess, and before he was thirteen had defeated many well-known amateurs. For several years he studied law at the College of South Carolina, and played chess only occasionally. But in 1857, at the first American Chess congress, held in New York, he easily defeated the best players that could be brought against him.

In 1858 Morphy went to England, and there defeated Loewenthal, Boden, and Bird, and performed the most astonishing feats in simultaneous games without the board. When he was in Paris, the same year, he won five out of eight games with Harrwitz, and gave many exhibitions of blindfold playing. It was these last that were responsible for the early breakdown of his health. After his return to the United States, in 1859, he defeated the visiting German expert, Anderssen, in seven out of eleven games. He was admitted to the bar, and began to practice law in New Orleans. But the strain of his blindfold contests had been too great for his mind, and he was forced first to give up chess altogether, and then to abandon all mental occupation. He lived in retirement until his death, in 1884. His activity thus covered a comparatively short space of time. Morphy's skill is described as inexplicable. He never was a close student of chess. He played his games easily and quickly, with no preparation and little hesitation. Yet his combinations were "remarkable for finesse, depth, elegance, and soundness." He also possessed a phenomenal memory.

WHY CHILDREN HATE MUSIC

Too Often They Are Taught With Little Regard to Capacity of Their Understanding.

Why do children hate music? asked an English contemporary some time ago, and then proceeded to answer its own propounded question by saying, according to the Musical Leader, that: "The truth is that children are too often the helpless victims of incompetent or ill-trained teachers, whose chief idea seems to be to stuff their luckless pupils with such knowledge as they themselves possess, forgetting that the child, in this respect, but a baby, who needs foods specially adapted to its digestive powers. Consequently indigestion follows and the child's musical health suffers."

"We believe that nearly all children enjoy music. It is natural to them to love singing, and it is through singing that their musical sense should be developed."

But not through such singing as we noted some, three or four years ago in some of the public schools. As the English writer says:

"If children 'hate music,' it is because they are so often taught unpsychologically and with so little regard to the intellect."

These same children from the public schools who were singing driving piffle parrot wise are the young people of today who should be attending our great concerts given by the orchestras and choral societies, and yet how many can be seen at classical concerts and fine recitals? Here is a question for the head of the public school music system. "Is about time music for children got out of a rut."

Both Were Trying.

"Well, well," exclaimed the millionaire, "what do you want this morning?"

"I've come again to ask you for your daughter."

"Haven't I told you six times over, on as many different days, that it is out of the question?"

"If I seem to be more persistent than circumstances warrant, you, sir, are to blame."

"I!" shouted the indignant man.

"There," said the man who loved his daughter, as he pointed to a motto over the banker's desk, "is my excuse for coming day after day, 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try, try again.' Do you not believe in that sentiment?"

After he had scratched his head a while, the mean plutocrat said:

"Yes, I believe in that. I haven't succeeded yet in making you understand that my daughter shall not become the wife of a fool, but I am going to keep on trying till I do. Good morning!"

Couldn't Read.

They were discussing the rights and wrongs of a strike, and stout and strenuous were the arguments on either side.

"Look here! Say I ain't tellin' th' truth! Look there," said Bob Pellott, producing a newspaper, and flourishing it under Joe's eye.

But Joe ignored the proffered literature.

"I don't want to see no newspaper," he said, loftily. "Wot I knows, I knows."

"And that ain't much," said Bob. "Don't want to see the newspaper, 'e don't. Why? 'Cos 'e can't read. Undecided—that's wot he is."

Immediately Joseph's ire rose.

"I'm as well educated as you, Bob," he said, with dignity. "But as I learnt it in a night school, 'o course I can't read in the daytime!"

Poor Hubby.

The young bride was doing the family marketing for the first time. She stopped at the fish stall and looked over the array of sea food.

"All perfectly fresh, mam'am," said the dealer, ingratiatingly.

"Oh, dear," exclaimed the bride. "That's what everybody says. I wish I could find some stale fish. You see, my husband has indigestion, and the doctor won't even let him eat fresh bread. I'm sure fresh fish would be even worse for him."

Old Wines.

Some time ago a bottle of ancient wine was found during the demolition of an old house at Finsbury, England. It appears that this ancient bottle is eclipsed by the treasures of France. Some of the cellars in Paris contain bottles of Sauterne at least two centuries old. This is a very respectable age, but it is nothing compared with a certain Ribeauvilliers of 1652, or a Steinwein of 1540, or a Jewish Passover wine of five centuries and a half. Still, in the museum at Reims there is a far older wine, or rather a bottle containing something which was once wine.

It is said to date four centuries before our era. This, tradition says, was found in a tomb of the Gallo-Roman period. Berthelot, the celebrated chemist, has left on record that he once analyzed a bottle of wine made in the neighborhood of Rome about Nero's time. In this case the analyst had only a dry residuum to work upon.
